

MOONDYNE JOE

HASS, English

Who was Moondyne Joe, and how do we know about him?

Students will:

- Understand the difference between primary and secondary sources of information.
- Use historical sources to collect information and make inferences about the past.
- Evaluate the usefulness of sources.
- Write a poem inspired by historical events.

ENGAGE

Show students, first, the compass pouch and, second, the compass from the Toodyay local history collection. Ask if students can guess what the items are.

EXPLAIN

- The compass and pouch are believed to have belonged to a convict, Joseph Bolitho Johns, otherwise known as Moondyne Joe. He became infamous after repeatedly escaping from prisons in Fremantle and in Toodyay.
- The compass was donated to the Newcastle Gaol Museum by May Hall, when it opened in 1961. May's father, Charles Samuel Hall, was a senior warder at Fremantle Prison and took an interest in Moondyne Joe, who had carried out gardening duties for the family. The donated items are an example of a primary source of information.
- A primary source is an artefact, document, diary, manuscript, autobiography, recording, or any other source of information that was created at the time under study. In contrast a secondary source of information is one that was created later, by someone who did not experience first-hand the time and events you are researching. An example is an information leaflet about Moondyne Joe created by the Newcastle Gaol Museum. Both sources of information are useful when learning about the past.
- You can read The legend of Moondyne Joe, and explain that the author, Mark Greenwood, would have used both primary and secondary sources of information to research and write the story.

EXPLORE

Show students a photo of Moondyne Joe, and discuss:

- What can we learn – or guess – about Moondyne Joe by looking at this photo? (eg. that he wasn't very rich; he may have observed how Aboriginal people used kangaroo skins to make cloaks and copied them)
- What are some questions about Moondyne Joe that this source doesn't help us answer? (eg. We don't know where he came from, or what he did)

Working in small groups, pairs or individually, get students to use a selection of primary and secondary sources of information to find out more about Moondyne Joe.

Discuss:

- When were the sources produced, who by and why?
- What information about Moondyne Joe does each source provide, and what information is missing?
- How did the authors of the secondary sources know about Moondyne Joe?

EXTEND

Moondyne Joe has become a legend, inspiring poems, books and songs to be written about him, as well as community events such as the Toodyay Moondyne Joe Festival. Show students some examples of poems written about Moondyne Joe, and get them to write their own poem using the information they gathered.

EVALUATE AND REFLECT

- What have we learned about Moondyne Joe?
- Do you think an object like the compass would have been valuable to Moondyne Joe? Why?
- Why should we try to use a variety of sources when trying to find out about the past?

Moondyne Joe of the 'Hole in the Wall' notoriety has again made his appearance, having returned, (under police escort), to his old quarters in Fremantle Prison under the following circumstances:—Some time last month a man in the employ of Mr. Charles Ferguson, of the Swan was found drowned in the river. It being late when the body was recovered Mr. Ferguson suggested that a glass of wine would do the party, who had been engaged in the search, no harm, and forthwith proceeded to the cellar to get a supply. On entering the cellar he saw a man crouched between the casks, and Mr. Ferguson called out to the party above who came down and succeeded in arresting Moondyne Joe, whom they handed over to the police. Before he was secured Joe managed to strike one of the men over the head with a loaded whip. On being searched a bunch of skeleton keys and pick locks were found on him, and in a bag in the cellar were two wooden kegs and a dark lantern with matches and candle—on his feet he had a pair of Moccasins made of sheepskin, with the wool outside, evidently worn for the purpose of blinding his tracks. The keys found on Moondyne were examined by Mr. Sub. Inspector Snook, and some of them fitted the lock of the cellar door, which is one of Chubbs'. Had Joe been a member of the Temperance Society he would not have come to grief, and he evidently had not read Fielding's remark, "that wine is a turncoat; first a friend and then an enemy."

On the 22nd inst., Moondyne Joe was charged at the Fremantle Prison before John Stone, Esq., J.P., with having broken into and entered the premises of Mr. Charles Ferguson on the Swan, for the purpose of committing a robbery. For this offence he was sentenced to 3 years in irons, having previously been sentenced to 12 months in irons for absconding through the hole in the wall some time back.

The Perth Races come off on Thursday and Friday next, and they promise to be the best ever yet run in the colony—the number of horses entered being much larger than on any previous occasion—while some of them are of the best blood in the colony. The entries were made

On Monday night a prisoner named Johns, rejoicing in the alias of Moondyne Joe, managed to effect his escape from his cell in the Convict Establishment, cleared the walls and got clear away without alarming any of the officers of the prison. From particulars I have gained it appears that he managed to detach the iron bars of the window and made his exit, taking part of his bed-clothes with him which he used to descend on the outside, having ascended by means of a post placed against the wall. The Police took up his track and followed it up to the Canning, but I have not yet heard of his re-capture.
